5 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO PHILLY

EVAN MACY, SPORTS EDITOR

All good things come to an end. The Sixers showed they were human Monday night — especially with Joel Embiid still recovering from surgery to his eye, and Philly fans remembered what it felt like to lose. With their big man likely to be back Thursday night in Miami, there is no need to dismay. The Sixers could be served well by remembering what got them here: a fierce desire to buck the trends of constant tanking. The new era is here and good things are ahead. SEAN HANNITY REVEALED AS COHEN MYSTERY CLIENT

1 President Donald Trump's personal lawyer was forced on Monday to reveal in a New York federal court that Fox News personality Sean Hannity, one of Trump's most ardent defenders, was also on his client list. Michael Cohen, Trump's fiercely loyal and pugnacious lawyer, disclosed Hannity's name through one of his own lawyers at the order of the judge. Stormy Daniels, an adult-film actress who claims to have had a sexual encounter with Trump, watched from the public gallery. Daniels is fighting a 2016 nondisclosure agreement arranged by Cohen in which she got $130,000 to stop her from discussing her claim she had sex with Trump a decade prior, something Trump has denied. Hannity, 56, said on Monday that he had never paid for Cohen's services or been represented by him, but had sought confidential legal advice from him. The conservative host often uses his broadcast on Fox News to defend the president against what he sees as biased attacks by the media. The naming of Hannity made him the latest outsized media personality to be drawn into the investigation's cast of unlikely supporting characters. Read more on page 12.

WHITE HOUSE DELAYS NEW SANCTIONS ON RUSSIA

2 President Donald Trump has delayed imposing additional sanctions on Russia and is unlikely to approve them unless Moscow carries out a new cyberattack or some other provocation, a senior administration official said on Monday. U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley said on Sunday that Washington was preparing new sanctions on Russia over its support of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad. "The ambassador got out ahead of things this time," the senior administration official told Reuters on condition of anonymity. The Washington Post first reported that Trump had put a stop to a plan for additional economic sanctions on Russia. The official said Trump was concerned that immediately imposing more sanctions, on the heels of last weekend's U.S.-led strike against Russian-backed Assad, would interfere with his efforts to negotiate agreements with Russian President Vladimir Putin on combating Islamic extremism, policing the internet and other issues. The U.S. has taken a series of measures against Russia, including expelling diplomats over a poisoning case in Britain and imposing sanctions against 24 Russians over interference in the presidential election.

REPUBLICANS INTENSIFY ATTACKS ON JAMES COMEY

4 President Donald Trump, his White House staff and the Republican National Committee escalated their attacks on Monday against the former director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation who called Trump a "morally unfit" leader in an interview. James Comey, who was fired by Trump last year amid an FBI investigation of possible ties between Russia's meddling in the U.S. election and Trump's 2016 campaign, made his comments in an interview with ABC News on Sunday, saying Trump may be vulnerable to blackmail by Russia. Comey has written a book to be released on Tuesday that also is highly critical of Trump. During the weekend the president had tweeted that Comey was a "slimeball," "a leaker & liar" and a terrible FBI director. On Monday, he returned to Twitter to accuse Comey and "others" of committing "many crimes." Trump provided no evidence of a crime and Comey has not been accused of wrongdoing by legal authorities. He may be a witness for any charges of obstruction of justice under consideration by U.S. Special Counsel Robert Mueller, who is investigating connections between Trump's campaign and Russia.

DATA: 'SUSPICIOUS GROUPS' BEHIND FACEBOOK ADS

5 Most of the political ads about divisive issues that ran on Facebook Inc. before the 2016 U.S. presidential election were sponsored by "suspicious groups" with no publicly available information about them, according to a study released on Monday and based on a database of 5 million ads on Facebook. One in six of those groups was linked to Russia, according to a University of Wisconsin-Madison study, and the identities of the rest of the 122 groups that are labeled "suspicious" are still unknown, an indication of the influence of "astroturf" or shell companies in U.S. politics. Over a quarter of the suspicious ads mentioned Donald Trump or Hillary Clinton, two of the presidential candidates in the election, and 9 percent expressly advocated for or against individual candidates. Most other ads deliberately avoided mentioning candidate names while still getting the message out by doing things like supporting policies pushed by candidates, Young Mie Kim, the lead researcher said. The researchers labeled suspicious ad-buyers as groups with pages that have been inactive, inaccessible, removed or banned by Facebook, and there was no information available publicly about them.

Starbucks apologizes, manager quits after arrest of two black men at Philly cafe

Tumult carries on over arrest in Starbucks of two black men for "trespassing."

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

A Starbucks cafe in Rittenhouse Square closed for the day Monday as activists occupied the coffee shop with repeated protests of the weekend arrests of two black men.

Starbucks CEO Kevin Johnson, who came to Philadelphia on Monday, said it was "completely inappropriate to engage the police" related to two black men, whose arrests on April 12 for allegedly not buying anything and "trespassing" were caught on cellphone video that went viral and made worldwide headlines.

"The circumstances surrounding the incident and the outcome in our store on Thursday were reprehensible. … They were wrong," Johnson told ABC's "Good Morning America" from Philly, where he also met with Mayor Kenney and Police Commissioner Ross to address the incident.

Johnson also promised all Starbucks employees will have "unconscious bias" training.

Meanwhile, the manager at the cafe who originally called 911 decided to leave her position, according to the Inquirer. She has not been identified publicly.

Protests were held Monday at the Starbucks by Philly for REAL Justice in the morning, and in the afternoon by POWER (Philadelphians Organized to Witness Empower and Rebuild).

Philadelphia Police Commissioner Richard Ross defended the actions of the officers who made the arrests as being within policy and an obligation, due to the call put out by Starbucks staff. But the Pennsylvania chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU-PA) claimed that policing is discriminatory in the section of Center City where this Starbucks is located. The ACLU said that "67 percent of stops in the police service area where the store is located are of African-Americans," while that group only makes up 3 percent of the area's population.

"If Commissioner Ross sincerely believes his officers did nothing wrong, merely followed policies and procedures, then those policies and procedures need to be changed."

Reggie Shuford, ACLU PA's executive director

The ACLU said that "67 percent of stops in the police service area where the store is located are of African-Americans."

"Black Philadelphians face daily indignities when they are simply trying to go about their business. This incident shows that black people can't even 'wait while black,'" Reggie Shuford, ACLU-PA's executive director, said in a statement. "Are black people not welcome in this neighborhood? … If Commissioner Ross sincerely believes his officers did nothing wrong, merely followed policies and procedures, then those policies and procedures need to be changed."

The men who were arrested have not yet been identified. Cellphone video of the arrest showed police handcuffing and leading them out after staff called 911 to report trespassing on the males, who they said were in the cafe but hadn't bought anything. They were released about eight hours later without being criminally charged.

The Mayor's Office of Black Male Engagement is planning to host a community meeting about this issue on Thursday, April 19, at 5:30 p.m. at Community College of Philadelphia.

Democrats outraising Republicans in key House races

Democrats have a $10.5 million fundraising advantage over Republicans in the 25 most competitive races for seats the U.S. House of Representatives ahead of the November elections, according to an analysis by Reuters.

Party leaders, encouraged by recent victories in special elections in Pennsylvania and Alabama, hope it will be enough to help them flip 24 seats needed in November to wrestle control of the chamber from Republicans.

The fundraising gap could reflect opposition to President Donald Trump and growing enthusiasm among rank-and-file Democrats toward the midterm elections.

Still, the analysis of federal campaign finance disclosures also shows that the average Republican candidate has raised more funds than the average Democrat. Because most of the seats are either open or already held by a Republican, the funds raised by Democrats are spread among more candidates vying for their party's nomination. In the races covered by the analysis, there are 127 Democrats and 65 Republicans.

By the end of March, Democrats in the most competitive races brought in $44.7 million and had $40.5 million in cash left over. Republicans from the same districts reported raising $34.2 million with $27.9 million in cash.

All 435 members of the U.S. House will stand for re-election in November. Recent polls have found conflicting evidence of whether voters are gearing up to produce a wave that would favor Democrats. A Reuters/Ipsos poll found older, white voters abandoning the Republican Party. And a Washington Post/ABC News poll released Monday found the gap among all voters narrowing. REUTERS

Philly native Daryl Worley, 23, was dropped from the Eagles after being accused on April 15 of DUI and fighting with officers. PPD

Eagles Drop Daryl Worley after DUI in South Philly

Cornerback Daryl Worley was released from the Eagles after being arrested and Tased by police.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Former Eagles cornerback Daryl Worley was arrested Sunday morning after allegedly becoming combative with police who found him passed out in a car that was blocking traffic, officials said.

On Monday, the Philadelphia Police Department announced Worley, 23, a North Philly native who attended William Penn Charter School and currently resides in Swedesboro New Jersey, would be charged with DUI, violation of the uniform firearms act and disorderly conduct.

Police got a call of a car blocking the roadway on the 1300 block of Pattison Avenue around 6 a.m. on April 15. When officers responded, they reportedly found Worley passed out in his car behind the wheel outside the Eagles' NovaCare Complex. He allegedly became combative with officers, at which point they used a stun gun on him. A gun was also reportedly found at the scene.

Worley was traded to the Eagles from the Panthers in March. The team unceremoniously announced his removal from the team on Sunday, less than 12 hours after the arrest.

"Roster Move: #Eagles have released CB Daryl Worley," they said.

Philly rapper Meek Mill still in jail, but will get new trial

Meek Mill's recent re-incarceration stemmed from a 2008 arrest which is now facing serious questions. GETTY IMAGES

Lawyers for rapper Meek Mill, real name Robert Williams, celebrated on Monday a Philly judge's decision to allow him a new trial, although he will remain in custody for now.

"Earlier today, the Philadelphia District Attorney's Office indicated our support for Meek Mill to be given a new trial. This position was taken due to serious issues regarding the credibility of the arresting officer in the case, Officer Reginald Graham," tweeted Ben Waxman, spokesman for Philly DA Larry Krasner. "These issues, which only recently became public, have implications for dozens of cases where Graham was the arresting officer. Our office also holds the position that we do not oppose Mr. Mill being released on bail while his appeals are being considered."

"Our office also holds the position that we do not oppose Mr. Mill being released on bail while his appeals are being considered."

Ben Waxman, spokesman for the Philly DA's office

Judge Genece Brinkley, who sentenced Meek in 2017 against the suggestions of prosecutors and probation officers to two to four years, ruled in favor of Meek on Monday at the Post Conviction Relief Hearing and set a hearing on possibly vacating the verdict for June, but did not release him on bail.

Meek Mill's recent re-incarceration stemmed from a 2008 arrest which is now facing serious questions related to allegations that the Philly cop who arrested Meek may not have been credible.

Former Officer Reginald Graham was revealed recently to have been on former DA Seth Williams' controversial "Do Not Call" list of 29 Philly police officers who city prosecutors were directed not to call to testify. DA Larry Krasner offered no support or endorsement of the validity of that list, due to questions over how it was compiled. But they did say in court on Monday that they believe the verdict could soon be vacated.

Meek was on probation due to a 2008 arrest on charges of gun possession and assaulting police. In a 2015 Billboard interview, the rapper admitted to having an illegal gun at the time, but claimed police beat him during the arrest, not the other way around.

That story was bolstered when Jerold Gibson, the former son-in-law of former Gov. Tom Corbett who was fired from the Philadelphia Police Department for stealing cash found in evidence, came forward to back up Meek's claim and submitted sworn statements that Graham and other cops beat Meek during the arrest.

Meek was not in attendance at the hearing, but some 100 of his supporters rallied outside the Criminal Justice Center despite the rain to show their support. SAM NEWHOUSE

Cosby lawyer to sex assault accuser: 'Did you fabricate a scheme?'

Cosby has repeatedly denied the accusations, saying any sexual contact was consensual.

Bill Cosby's defense team on Monday sought to undercut the credibility of a woman accusing the comedian of sexual assault by pressing her about accusations she schemed to plant a false story of abuse to reap hush money.

Cosby, 80, is undergoing his second trial on charges that he drugged and raped Andrea Constand, 45, at his suburban Philadelphia home in 2014. At the time, she was director of operations for the women's basketball team at Temple University, the entertainer's alma mater.

The former TV star's first trial ended with the jury unable to reach a verdict.

Constand has accused Cosby of attacking her when she visited him to discuss leaving her job. After she consumed three blue pills that he said would relax her, she said she became immobilized and awoke to find Cosby touching her breasts and vagina and using her hand to stroke his penis.

Two days of cross examination ended with defense lawyer Tom Mesereau asking Constand if she once roomed with Margo Jackson, who was barred from testifying in the first trial but will be allowed to take the witness stand in the retrial.

Jackson has said that Constand once told her on a basketball road trip that she could make a lot of money through a false charge of sexual assault against a celebrity.

On Monday, under questioning by Mesereau, Constand denied knowing Jackson, rooming with her or ever speaking to her.

Mesereau then said, "Before you filed charges against Mr. Cosby, did you fabricate a scheme?"

Montgomery County Assistant District Attorney Kristen Feden interrupted with an objection sustained by Montgomery County Court of Common Pleas Judge Steven O'Neill.

Mesereau tried a second time, slightly altering his statement and again drew a sustained objection.

Earlier on Monday, the defense questioned whether Constand followed the terms of a $3.38 million civil settlement Cosby had paid her.

The payout settled a civil lawsuit that Constand filed after Pennsylvania prosecutors in 2005 initially declined to charge Cosby for the alleged assault. Mesereau repeatedly asked Constand if she had abided by its terms, which barred her from initiating criminal charges against him.

"You didn't talk to anyone about the criminal case after you got all this money?" Mesereau asked.

Constand said she had not.

"Then what are you doing here?" he demanded.

Prosecutors objected, and Judge O'Neill sustained the objection. But Mesereau repeated the line: "Then why are you here?" several more times, prompting the judge to remind the jury that attorney statements are not evidence and should not be considered when it deliberates.

Constand is one of about 50 women who have accused Cosby of assaults dating back decades. Her accusation is the only one recent enough to be the subject of prosecution. REUTERS

Trump tax cuts will stimulate the economy, but concerns persist

Trump's tax plan is showing some early signs of market stimulation, but concerns persist about its long-term effects.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Love him or hate him, President Donald Trump held true to his campaign promise of cutting taxes. Plenty of working Americans will get more money back in their tax returns in 2017, partly thanks to a reduction of the tax withholding rate, and significantly lower tax rates taking effect this year will mean even bigger returns next year.

"From the near-term perspective, I think you're seeing stimulation, particularly on my end — people are taking money out of markets now, investable income from bonuses or whatever it might be and putting it into hard assets," said Cody Vichinsky, co-founder at Bespoke Real Estate. "My segment, being ultra-luxury real estate, is not prone to impacts of policy in the same ways as other areas. It's much more about emotion. … They sentimentally are feeling a little more financially free or capable to invest that money into an asset."

Bespoke Real Estate is a high-end real estate brokerage that only sells properties in the Hamptons that cost more than $10 million, with a median sales price around $27 million. Vichinsky said the impact of cuts here and there is less important to his clientele than a general optimism bubbling up in domestic markets, noting that indicators like retail sales are on the upswing, which he said is driving investor confidence upward.

"People are benefitting across the entire spectrum, whether they're a lower tier of wealth or luxury, ultra, ultra high-tier," he said. "People have retained a little bit more of their income, whether through their tax savings or their bonuses, and they can go put back more into the economy."

But after the cuts are in place, along with planned decreased funding to various government agencies and social services, the outlook might get a bit dicier.

"The interest rate hike and the addition to our national debt based on the tax cuts, the long-term analysis of that is on people's minds for sure," Vichinsky said.

Trump's plan included a 20 percent deduction in the tax rate for so-called pass-through entities, where income "passes through" to an owner who pays an individual income tax rate under the old code.

Main Street Alliance, a network of small business owners, said there are more risks than benefits in that deduction and the tax plan in general.

"The national median income for a typical business is $50,000 — these are the bodegas and auto mechanics who are likely to see hikes in their health insurance premiums that far outweigh any small tax cut they may receive," the group said in a new report on the impact of the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act.

Overall, the Alliance said, they expect small business owners to be impacted negatively more than they will gain from the cuts.

Trump's tax plan included a 20 percent deduction in the tax rate for "pass-through" entities.

Cody Vichinsky, co-founder at Bespoke Real Estate, an ultra-high-end Hamptons brokerage, said he see signs in the short-term of market confidence after the Trump tax cuts. COURTESY OF BESPOKE REAL ESTATE

Filing for an extension on your taxes needs to be done at the same time as everyone else is turning in their actual taxes. GETTY IMAGES

How do I file for a tax extension, and is filing for an extension bad?

You're not going to make it. You had grand plans to file your taxes this year way ahead of the rush — you even got all those discount emails from several tax filing firms — but life just got in the way. Somewhere between all the weekend shopping and errands and straight exhaustion from work, you just never got around to it. So now the question is: How do I file for a tax extension?

Filing for an extension: Is it bad, and is there a penalty?

We'll cut to the chase here about filing for an extension: No, it's not bad — as long as you do it on time. Filing for an extension on your taxes needs to be done at the same time as everyone else is turning in their actual taxes, which means now. You'll need to have all the paperwork filled out electronically — or filled out and mailed in — by the deadline, which varies from year to year. In 2018, that's Tuesday, April 17.

Here's the thing that you need to remember when filing for an extension, though: The IRS is all about that money. You need to not only file for an extension on your tax forms but also pay them an estimation of what you probably owe on your taxes.

You'll get slapped with one of two penalties if you don't file both of these, depending on which you fail to do. The two types of penalties the IRS can leverage against you are: the failure-to-file penalty and the failure-to-pay penalty, which is pretty self-explanatory. "The failure-to-file penalty is generally more than the failure-to-pay penalty," the IRS writes on its own website.

So, how do I file for a tax extension?

Filing for an extension is simple: Use the Free File link on the IRS website. This free service will make it easy for you to fill out Form 4868, the request form for an automatic tax filing extension. Simply select the paperwork for over or under $66,000 based on your annual income.

If you file for a tax extension, your tax filing deadline will be October 15 — but your estimated taxes, again, are still due on Tax Day.

LINNEA ZIELINSKI

"The failure-to-file penalty is generally more than the failure-to-pay penalty."

The IRS, on its website

TAXES

Why are taxes due on April 17, not April 15?

It's not that you're ungrateful. You appreciate each and every second of those extra few days to track down your W2 and finally file your 2018 taxes. But, why are taxes due on April 17? Isn't that dreaded date generally April 15?

First of all, no, you haven't been turning your taxes in early every year or losing out on valuable days. Tax Day is, indeed, generally on April 15, but there are exceptions so the exact date can vary from year to year. You might remember, for example, that Tax Day 2017 and 2016 fell on April 18. So, what's the deal?

Why are taxes due on April 17? Well, part of it has to do with the federal government and their workweek. If April 15 falls on a weekend, which it does this year, the exact date of the tax deadline gets bumped since no one's around at the IRS to check that everything's been filed.

This year, April 15 falls on a Sunday, meaning government offices are closed.

So why aren't your taxes due on that Monday, April 16? That's where you got another lucky break this year — although, we suppose, not as lucky as in 2016 and 2017 when April 15 fell on a Saturday. Our taxes aren't due the Monday directly following April 15 because it's a holiday, though you might not have ever heard about it.

Monday, April 16 is Emancipation Day. Although many people let the holiday pass unrecognized, it's a big enough federal holiday for government offices to be closed. That includes the IRS, which is why you get one more day to complete your taxes.

Emancipation Day marks the date Abraham Lincoln signed the Compensated Emancipation Act in 1862, thereby freeing more than 3000 slaves in the District of Columbia. LINNEA ZIELINSKI

How does attorney-client privilege rule apply to FBI raid on Trump's lawyer?

The following describes the legal doctrine of attorney-client privilege and whether it may apply to communications between Trump and Cohen.

Michael Cohen, who has described himself as Trump's "fix-it guy," has been at the center of a controversy over a $130,000 payment he made to adult-film star Stormy Daniels. GETTY IMAGES

Prosecutors and lawyers for President Donald Trump and his longtime personal attorney Michael Cohen clashed on Monday in a New York City courtroom over how to determine what materials seized in raids on Cohen's home and offices are covered by "attorney-client privilege."

Lawyers for Cohen also sought to keep the identify of one of his other clients secret but were ordered by Judge Kimba Wood to reveal it was Fox News commentator Sean Hannity.

What is attorney-client privilege?
Attorney-client privilege is a long-standing doctrine of U.S. law that allows the subject of a lawsuit or criminal case to keep their communications with legal counsel private.

Lawyers can invoke the privilege to avoid testifying about conversations with clients or turning over emails or other correspondence. The related work-product privilege covers documents produced in the course of a legal representation.

The traditional justification for attorney-client privilege is that the legal system operates more fairly when people are able to speak candidly with lawyers, said Jens David Ohlin, a professor of criminal law at Cornell Law School.

"If clients feel like whatever they disclose to attorneys will be turned over to authorities, they won't feel free to talk openly," Ohlin said.

Does that mean all communications with a lawyer are protected?
No, the privilege only covers communications relating to legal advice, said Lisa Kern Griffin, a former federal prosecutor and a professor at Duke University School of Law.

It does not protect a person's discussion of business, personal, or financial matters with a lawyer if they are unrelated to a representation.

Crucially, attorney-client privilege also does not apply to communications by a lawyer in furtherance of a crime or fraud.

Does privilege make it harder to search a lawyer's office?
Yes. The U.S. Department of Justice has a policy of only raiding law offices if less intrusive approaches, like issuing a request for documents, could compromise the investigation.

Under department policy, the raid of Cohen's offices required multiple levels of authorization by high-level officials.

"It is very unusual to take such an action," said Griffin. "It suggests there is deep criminality at issue and real concern that just asking for the documents won't be enough to ensure they are turned over."

The application would need to be approved by a federal judge tasked with determining whether there is probable cause to believe the search would produce evidence of a crime. REUTERS

How to get your hands on a copy of the James Comey book today

James Comey's "A Higher Loyalty" has reached No. 3 on Amazon's Best Sellers List of 2018. GETTY IMAGES

The much-talked-about James Comey book, "A Higher Loyalty: Truth, Lies, and Leadership," has made major headlines leading up to its release today. In The New York Times' review of the book, critic Michiko Kakutani stated that it "underscores just how outside presidential norms Trump's behavior has been — how ignorant he is about his basic duties as president, and how willfully he has flouted the checks and balances that safeguard our democracy, including the essential independence of the judiciary and law enforcement."

On Monday, "A Higher Loyalty" was No. 3 on Amazon's Best Sellers List of 2018, which is updated daily (in comparison, Michael Wolff's "Fire and Fury" is still No. 1). CNN Money reported on Friday that, in anticipation of high demand, Flatiron Books printed 850,000 copies, and if you want to get your hands on the highly anticipated James Comey book — assuming you haven't already pre-ordered it — here are your best same-day purchase options.

First thing's first: If you're not into online orders, you can lace up your best pair of running shoes and book it to the nearest Barnes and Noble or Amazon Books to try and get a copy of "A Higher Loyalty." If it's anything like Michael Wolff's "Fire and Fury," make sure you're prepared for long lines and for copies to sell out fast.

You can also purchase and download the James Comey book through iTunes.

If you're having trouble finding copies, or you don't mind waiting a few business days to read through Comey's new memoir, you can still go to the Amazon and Barnes and Noble websites to order "A Higher Loyalty." Other websites where you can place orders include, Books A Million, Indie Bound and Powell's.

May the odds be ever in your favor on Tuesday and thereafter. SAM BRODSKY

More than 200 million eggs have been recalled due to salmonella scare

If you've recently purchased eggs from Walmart, you should check the packaging.

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) announced an egg recall because of a recent salmonella contamination scare.

More than 200 million eggs are being recalled over recent concerns over a salmonella contamination that has spread across nine states. According to the Food and Drug Administration, the contamination originated at a farm in North Carolina.

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) announced the egg recall in a statement Friday that the recalled eggs from the North Carolina farm were distributed to restaurants and supermarkets in Colorado, Florida, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, South Carolina and West Virginia.

The FDA has reported 22 illnesses related to the recent incident.

The FDA reports eggs from the following the brands have been recalled including "loose" eggs that are distributed to various restaurants in large quantities: Coburn Farms, Country Daybreak, Food Lion, Glenview, Great Value, Nelms and Sunshine Farms

The Food Lion brand is sold at Food Lion supermarkets and has been pulled off its shelves due to the salmonella scare. The Great Value brand is sold at Walmart.

According to the FDA, the affected egg cartons are labeled with the plant number P-1065 with packing dates ranging from 011 through 102, using the Julian date system, which is used on some egg cartons to represent the day the eggs were packed. That number can be found on the side of the carton or packaging.

The FDA urged consumers who have purchased eggs that could contain salmonella to immediately discontinue use and return them to the place they were purchased for a full refund. If you have questions concerning your eggs or the packaging date on the container, you can call Hyde County Farms in North Carolina at (855) 215-5730.

According to the CDC, there are approximately 1.2 million illnesses, 23,000 hospitalizations and 450 deaths each year in the United States caused by salmonella.

This Republican billionaire using his tax breaks to fund Democrats

Boston billionaire Seth Klarman, who previously supported Republicans, will be using his windfall from the GOP tax-cut plan to fund Democratic candidates.

"The Republicans in Congress have failed to hold the president accountable and have abandoned their historic beliefs and values," said Klarman in a statement to The Boston Globe. "For the good of the country, the Democrats must take back one or both houses of Congress."

The CEO and president of Baupost Group, Klarman has a net worth of $1.5 billion, according to Forbes. He gave more than $7 million to Republican candidates during the Obama presidency but now says he will "invest" in Democrats, having given $200,000 to Democratic candidates since Trump's inauguration.

And more is to come. "I received a tax cut I neither need nor want.

Boston billionaire Seth Klarman has a reported net worth of $1.5 billion. GETTY IMAGES

I'm choosing to invest it to fight the administration's flawed policies and to elect Democrats to the Senate and House of Representatives," said Klarman.

The billionaire supported Hillary Clinton in the 2016 election, calling Donald Trump "completely unqualified for the highest office in the land," Reuters reported. He has also donated $2 million to Democratic issues such as gun control and environmental protection.

In October 2017, New York magazine reported that Klauman outlined some of his objections to Trump at an investment conference: "The president is a threat to democracy," said Klauman according to audio of the event. "He has attacked journalists and he's threatening to take away NBC's license. He's attacking judges. He's violating all sorts of democratic norms, from the emoluments clause to questioning the election and threatening to lock up his opponent. People don't focus on this, but Nazi Germany had a constitution before Hitler came to power and at the end of the war they had the exact same constitution. It lasted all the way through, but democracy didn't."

The billionaire added: "The country is getting divided, whether it's immigrants, whether it's transgender people, whether it's blacks, whether it's Mexicans. It's awful." MICHAEL MARTIN

South Philly Community Acupuncture celebrates the opening of a new location.

jennifer.logue@metro.us

Never tried acupuncture before? Well, here's your chance. On Saturday, April 21, South Philly Community Acupuncture is opening up a new location inside the Healing Arts Collective, located at 519 S. 9th St.

Owner of South Philly Community Acupuncture, Lauren O. Buckley, LAc, MSOM, says that it's a great way to combat stress, which is an underlying factor for a number of medical conditions.

"We live in a very stressful society and stress causes pain and injuries," she says. "Acupuncture is extremely effective in treating pain in any part of the body. It calms the central nervous system and in doing that, it balances and regulates all systems of the body, allowing them to function optimally. Because of this simple yet profound effect that acupuncture has, it facilitates the body to heal itself."

Buckley founded South Philly Community Acupuncture in 2007, with the mission of making acupuncture more accessible to people of all socioeconomic backgrounds.

"I was unfulfilled seeing one patient per hour in a private room for expensive fees," she says. "I changed my business model so I could help a greater population of individuals."

So what makes community acupuncture different? Patients are treated in a larger room with other patients.

"There is a greater energetic connection and healing vibe that is created by being among others, while resting on a very soothing treatment table," Buckley says. "I find it ideal that the patients are always within arms reach of their practitioner, so that their needs are met within the hour they are with us. We also have curtains for privacy, decor and materials to create a comforting atmosphere."

South Philly Community Acupuncture currently operates out of East Passyunk (1532 E. Passyunk Ave.), Media (211 W. State St.) and will now opens its doors at the Healing Arts Collective.

So why expand one mile north of East Passyunk?

"When I walked into the healing arts collective, I was astounded by the energy of the space and by the professionals already working there. I realized that the one thing missing in my practice on East Passyunk is the ability to heal collectively alongside other professionals within our collective group: massage, yoga, Gyrotonics, Pilates based physical therapy, energy work and psychotherapy," she says. "I am a strong believer in health, healing and preventative health services. I feel so lucky to be able to work amongst these healing artists knowing that my patients can now access their services in the same center that we are in."

The big grand opening celebration on Saturday coincides with the third anniversary of Healing Arts Collective. From 12 p.m. to 4 p.m., guests will enjoy free community acupuncture, massage, bodywork, sound healing, Reiki, yoga, Pilates, Gyrotonic, meditation and more. There will also be free snacks and juices from Fuel and P'unk Burger as well as the premiere of a new art show by artist Eddy Rhenals, that will be on display inside the space that day.

Why you need a financial adviser

Even if you don't think you do.

EVA KIS
eva.kis@metro.us

Most of us don't think we need a financial planner. Maybe you're one of the lucky ones who can pay their bills and throw a few dollars toward their 401K every month. Or maybe you live paycheck to paycheck and all you do is worry about money.

Thing is, there are things both of these people can learn from a money manager. Today is Tax Day, but all of April is Financial Literacy Month, and it's time to consider how a financial planner could change your life — because the work a real financial manager does is nothing short of that.

"It starts with the finances, but it ends up being about everything else," says Shannon McLay, a former Merrill Lynch financial analyst who started her own company called Financial Gym, a fitness-inspired money management hub to help with anything from resolving debt to figuring out how you can have that extra glass of wine when you go out to dinner.

So, who needs a financial trainer? We asked McLay what unlikely candidates may get out of making a few money moves.

The youngest spenders

The Financial Gym's clients range from 18 to 72 years old. Young people just entering college come to her as a preemptive strike against student loan debt, a problem that 44 million Americans are facing to the tune of over $1.4 trillion.

"I have a conspiracy theory that the schools don't want you to know these things, because how else would they get you to take out six figures of debt, which makes no sense?" she says.

The social media addicts

Waiting in line for two hours to get a giant milkshake and going after the brands Kim Kardashian endorses are two different things. "Social media is killing everybody," says McLay. "A lot of what we end up doing with our clients is life coaching them and mentoring them to not get caught up in the social media beauty of it all, because we know what's behind the scenes of social media posts and it's usually a lot of credit card debt and sadness and depression."

Shannon McLay wants you to feel good having that drink, instead of worrying about how much it cost. FINANCIAL GYM

The couples who are in trouble

It's not on McLay's business card but it should be: In the four years that Financial Gym has been in existence, not one of the couples have divorced. That's because financial advice often ends up being relationship advice.

McLay noticed a wife spending $1,000 over three months in $3 increments at Rite Aid. It turned out she was buying Diet Cokes there because her husband didn't like her buying it in bulk at the grocery store because it's unhealthy. "I say, OK, but what's really unhealthy is your wife acting out because she's not allowed to have it in the house," she says.

The frugal ones with savings

Even clients who are doing well come to McLay worried — nobody, she says, feels "abundance" when it comes to their bank account. "One of my most financially set couples, I say what's your goal and he said, 'I just want to know I can afford an extra glass of wine,'" she recalls. "They had $90,000 in the bank. Our really fit clients are scared to spend money or judge themselves for spending money." Talking to a financial adviser can help you understand how to spend money, not just save it.

Why Boston is the higher-ed capital of the US

There's more for students in Beantown than you think.

KARL SAINT LUCY
letters@metro.us

Maybe it's better in Boston, when it comes to school?

If you're a prospective student, you may be wondering why you should consider moving to Boston for school unless you get into Harvard. It's a great school! But not all 152,000 college students in the city go there. So what is it that makes Boston such a city on a hill for higher education?

Getting around

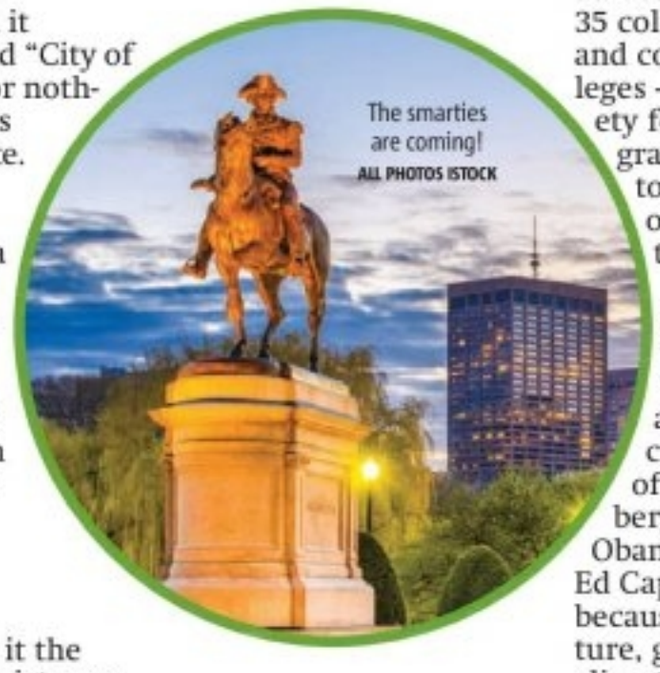
Both Boston proper and nearby Cambridge are in the top 10 for cities in the U.S. with the highest rates of pedestrian commuting. Walks to class among all the old buildings are gorgeous — they're also a great way to save fossil fuels and get some exercise. Boston's streets are not on a grid system, so you'll love recreational walking if you find adventure in getting lost! If you prefer to get around by bike, you can hop on a Hubway. Of course, there's always the T, Boston's subway system — just remember that the T stops running around 1 a.m., so be sure to check your line's schedule before a late night out with the squad.

Wide-open spaces

Though Boston is a densely packed city, there are plenty of spots to get out in the sun and forget about coursework. Boston Common — the first green space most out-of-towners hear about — is part of the Emerald Necklace, an 1,100-acre network of parks, parkways, and waterways that includes Franklin Park and the Arnold Arboretum. Harvard Yard, aside from being that place where you "pahk the cah," is a gorgeous spot to lie around under the shade of a tree. Lots of people go running on the Charles River Esplanade, and there are trails near the city where you can hike with your school chums.

Sports

They don't call it "Titletown" and "City of Champions" for nothing — its sports teams dominate. Prospective students who want to catch a game will not be disappointed — the Red Sox, Patriots, Celtics, Bruins and Revolution all call Boston home.



The smarties are coming!
ALL PHOTOS ISTOCK

Snow

Some consider it the bane of their existence — many others have been waiting all their lives to see it. Either way, snow is a guarantee for a winter in Boston, and it's pretty as heck. For the fitness-obsessed, you can think of the shoveling and trudging through you'll have to do as another free exercise opportunity!

Tons of schools

Boston has a vast array of choices when it comes to schools, with 35 colleges, universities and community colleges — plenty of variety for the high school graduate who wants to take advantage of all the city has to offer.

There's no reason for prospective students to think of Boston as an exclusive city for the likes of Mark Zuckerberg and Barack Obama. It's the Higher Ed Capital of the U.S. because its infrastructure, greenery, sports, climate, and variety of options make it an ideal place to study while having fun and staying healthy.

Why you should go local for college

Mom and Dad might be onto something, after all.

KARL SAINT LUCY
letters@metro.us

Despite wanting to get as far away from home as possible, it's actually a good idea to stay local. ISTOCK

You can see the light at the end of the tunnel — you're almost done with high school. Forever. Now's your moment of truth: Do you assert your soon-to-come adult independence by getting as far away as you can from everything you know, or do you stay local? A change of scenery might be nice, but sticking close to home has some awesome advantages.

You'll save cash

You might think that in-state tuition is your biggest cost-cutter when it comes to higher education. That's legit. But you may not have thought about some of the other ways you can rack up expenses in college. For one thing, rent prices for on-campus housing are insane, and you'll save a ton if you can live with family. Anyone who'se gone to college far away can tell you that flights home for the holidays are pricey, not to mention stressful. As for food, even Dad's weirdest omelet experiments are better than anything you'll get at the dining hall, and they're definitely cheaper. Saving some dollars will help you be more present for a full course load and lit social life.

You know your city

There's lots to love about Boston. You've grown up riding Septa, so you won't have to put yourself through the harrowing ordeal of learning a new public transit system. Plus, your new pals from out of town will see you as a regional wizard once they know they can count on you for flawless directions without (immediately) consulting your smartphone. You've spent your whole life going to your favorite team's games — not only will you get to keep seeing them play at home, you might make fans of your college friends. And remember that movie theater by your house with the gummy seats? Yeah, you can save your chums from a sticky situation with peerless "I grew up here" know-how.

Millennials, millennials everywhere

According to the Pew Charitable Trusts, "[Philadelphia's] population of 20- to 34-year-olds increased by about 100,000 from 2006 through 2012, according to U.S. Census Bureau estimates. When the city's overall population is divided into age groups of five years each, the 25- to 29-year-olds and 20- to 24-year-olds are by far the largest."

If you're worried that your mingling pool is limited to the people you knew in high school, don't be. There are plenty of newly minted adults around to befriend and date.

You're an adult now, so the decision is yours when it comes to the choice between staying in town and leaving for college. But don't jump to a hasty conclusion just because you think it might be cool to finally get some space from your parents! The benefits of sticking around deserve their fair shake, and getting Mom to stop nagging you to stay close by isn't the only one.

This new fitness app lets you train like a celeb

Introducing BBS by celebrity trainer Simone De La Rue.

SAM BRODSKY
Samantha.Brodsky@metro.us

Simone De La Rue at her Body by Simone West Hollywood studio. GETTY IMAGES

When you think of celebrity workouts, it's hard not to picture Chris Pratt abs engaged in pool-side planks or Michelle Obama arms banging out push-ups at a weekend boot camp. And now, we can work out like Hollywood stars with celeb trainer Simone De La Rue's new Body by Simone (BBS) app — it stays true to her high-intensity, dance-based Body by Simone method that she's known for.

"It is a celebrity's job to look a certain way for a film. They're paid to train for a specific role, so they have a goal to work towards and a tight deadline to achieve the results," De La Rue told Metro. "Training non-celebs, sometimes the intensity is not as great, as the extreme pressure is not present. At the end of the day though, exercise is exercise and it comes down to the person and how motivated they are."

BBS is powered by artificial intelligence to give you customizable and personalized workouts as well as a nutrition program suited to your preferences and fitness goals. With the premium monthly subscription — $19.99 — you also have access to live classes with De La Rue and hundreds of plant- and protein-based recipes created by nutritionist Kelly LeVeque.

LBBS is different from other workout apps because of its dual nutrition and exercise components, the celeb trainer told Metro. "It's your one stop shop for all your fitness needs."

Metro tried out BBS's free Workouts by Muscle Group (access to premium access costs $19.99/per month). So, that's what I went for — a zero-cost workout to get a sneak peek.

Want to get toned or trimmed (I chose toned)?What's your nutrition style? I was told, "Simone recommends" I work out five to six times weekly. (Thanks, Simone!)

Once I was officially in the BBS app, I wasn't able to unlock full recipes without subscribing to premium, which is a shame because the Shrimp Spring Rolls looked amazing.

After drooling over the recipe previews, I tried out the 10-minute ab and arm workouts. Both had the same full body warm-up — including lunges, punches and pliés — and cool down stretches. Both followed eight counts, which I liked because there were fewer reps for more sets.

The core workout focused on using your body weight, but it was challenging. De La Rue added in small variations to ordinary moves that ultimately made them more difficult (take, for instance, the extra pulse she added to bicycles). I also really liked that she saved extra time between each exercise to roll out your neck and release all that pressure that tends to build up.

Getting this glimpse into the app definitely made me want to upgrade to premium.

All this anti-bread stuff might not, actually, be good for you. ISTOCK

The dark side of going gluten-free

Just because everyone else is doing it, doesn't mean it's right for you.

LUCY E. COUSINS
letters@metro.us

It seems that everyone from your boss to your barista is going gluten-free these days. If you're not gluten-free yourself, chances are you know someone who is.

And you're not alone — according to Forbes, the number of Americans who avoid gluten on a regular basis stands at 3.1 million. And that number is rising.

The majority, some 72 percent, don't have a serious form (if any) of gluten intolerance but they choose to avoid gluten anyway for its perceived health benefits. Well, that and the fact that Gwyneth Paltrow loves a gluten-free diet.

Then again, she also advocated to be stung deliberately by bees. For health reasons.

"Most of us are looking for a quick health fix and when we hear of other people succeeding with a particular diet, we jump on board hoping to get the same results," explains dietitian Caitlin Reid.

But if you're not adversely affected by gluten (or, to be honest, even if you are), there are some serious side effects from choosing a gluten-free diet. And despite the belief that a gluten-free diet is healthier, research doesn't support this.

At a more day-to-day level, when every cafe is jumping on board the gluten-free bandwagon, it's important to remember gluten-free doesn't actually mean healthy. So that gluten-free burger, gluten-free cupcake and gluten-free candy that you're putting into your mouth can sometimes be worse than their glutinous alternatives.

"Many gluten-free products contain refined flours like rice, potato or corn, which cause a rapid spike in blood sugar levels, and this may increase our risk of developing diabetes," says Caitlin. "Also, packaged gluten-free products often have added sugars and salt to enhance their flavor, as well as emulsifiers to help with texture."

On top of that, many gluten-free products are also low in fiber, which we need for healthy digestion, and are more expensive than non-gluten options. But if you do decide (or need) to follow a gluten-free diet, there are some simple ways you can make sure your health doesn't suffer, including considering what nutritional deficiencies you're likely to have on the diet.

"If you go gluten-free, you might miss out on the benefits of whole grain unless you include a range of grains like rice, quinoa, buckwheat and millet," advises Caitlin. "It's also important to make sure you reach your daily intake of nutrients as research shows that people on a gluten-free diet develop deficiencies in folate, thiamin and iron."

And if you're sitting on the gluten-free fence, the best option might be to simply cut down on gluten in your diet to asses how your body reacts.

Bear in mind that might mean saying goodbye to your bagel breakfast and deep-dish pizza dinner, though.

WELCOME TO THE PLATINUM ERA OF PHILLY SPORTS

OPINION

GLEN MACNOW

Glen Macnow has been an outspoken voice in Philly sports for nearly three decades.
@realglenmacnow

The Eagles' Super Bowl victory in February could be the first of many celebrations for Philly teams during this current era of possibilities. GETTY IMAGES

The decade between 1974-83 is recognized as Philadelphia's Golden Era of Sports — with four world titles, seven other trips to the championships and at least 15 future hall of famers wandering our fair city.

We've had episodes of false hope since then. I recall going on air July 29, 2011, and predicting years of invincibility for our teams. That's the day the Phillies traded for Hunter Pence and the Dream Team Eagles brought Nnamdi Asomugha to training camp. We saw how that worked out.

So it's with trepidation that I predict we're entering, let's call it, the "Platinum Era of Philadelphia Sports." But the evidence is obvious. And my protective crust of Philly fan cynicism has been washed away by the Eagles Super Bowl win.

Let's start there, of course. The Platinum Era began Feb. 4 with the "Philly Special" and sulking Tom Brady refusing to shake hands. If this group of players never gets back to the Super Bowl, they've already given all of us — from eight to 80 — moments to celebrate forever.

Except I think they will. Carson Wentz is 25 years old. Health providing, he'll be an elite QB for a decade. The Eagles current depth chart lists just five starters over age 30 (with only one over 32), with eight starters 25 or younger. Howie Roseman amassed a team for the future and (in words I didn't once expect to say) Doug Pederson is the guy to coach them there.

That's the easy sell. And you'll likely agree that the Sixers have a strong shot of hosting a Broad Street celebration, regardless of how far they go this season. If you add together the ages of Joel Embiid, Ben Simmons and Markelle Fultz, they would just barely qualify for one full share of Social Security benefits. Toss in Dario Saric, who's just 24. It's a hell of a nucleus.

The Phillies? Now it requires some faith. But I look at the young pups on Gabe Kapler's lineup card (Rhys Hoskins, Scott Kingery, J.P. Crawford, Jorge Alfaro) and I'm taken back to 2005, looking at the beginnings of those future five-team NL East champs.

Faith says that Aaron Nola has ace potential (he may already be there) and that Jake Arrieta will prove his worth. Logic says that principal owner John Middleton is eager to burn through that cigar money to add veteran talent.

And then . . .

Okay, then the Flyers. It's unlikely the current Giroux-Voracek-Simmonds group will ever advance past the first round, let alone skate with the Cup. But the 25-and-under nucleus includes Shane Gostisbehere, Travis Konecny and Sean Couterier — and that's just the start of young guys with hard-to-spell names. Ivan Provorov, 21, will win a Norris Trophy or two as the NHL's best defenseman. Other emergent talent is on the horizon.

For the Flyers to break the city's longest title drought, of course, they must locate their first top-tier goalie since the Reagan Administration. Scouts and insiders tout Carter Hart, now 19 and starring for the Everett Silvertips of the Western Hockey League.

Alas, we can't fast-forward Hart's development. He's likely still two seasons away. But maybe, just maybe, by the time he's ready, we'll have entered the Platinum Era and we'll have that parade route memorized.

Flyers must skate more quickly, cleanly in Game 4

The Flyers have a penalty problem.

Through their first three playoff games, two of which they've lost by a combined score of 12-1, Philly has committed the most penalties in the entire Eastern Conference. In serving 46 minutes in penalties, Philly's 17 violations have given their first round foes the Penguins the most time with a man advantage in the postseason.

And that's not a recipe for success. The Penguins were the NHL's best power play squad in hockey during the regular season and converted three of six chances in Game 3's 5-1 win. They have had 15 opportunities thus far in three games and the Flyers know it's not a recipe for making a series comeback.

"They're a fast team and if you're catching up to them you're going to have stick penalties and things like that," Claude Giroux said Sunday. "It's not time to panic here, we play Wednesday here our guys will be ready and we're going to put this one behind us. We'll do exactly what we did after game one, we're going to look at what we did wrong and fix them."

The Flyers were able to flip the script over the weekend in Game 2, winning 5-1 but they were able to succeed on the penalty kill. They were also skating better — and according to several players that could be the biggest tweak necessary to even the series back at 2-2.

Game 4 between the Flyers and Pens drops puck at 7 p.m. Wednesday. GETTY IMAGES

"I think we gotta come more with speed like we did in game two," Jake Voracek said. "I think we were spread out too much. A little bit in the neutral zone and then spread out on the forecheck. Better timing from the D and the forwards. Hopefully we'll get better on Wednesday at that."

What the Flyers must avoid is pressing too much. After a pretty good first period Sunday that Philly dominated 11-4 from a shot perspective, a bad luck Sidney Crosby goal was the only blemish. Philadelphia never got its edge back as they fell further and further behind. Which certainly did goalie Brian Elliott no favors. He'll certainly welcome a cleaner, crisper game in Game 4.

"I don't know if it's frustration or you get caught not moving your feet and you're reaching a little bit, that's what happens you lose control of your stick," Elliott said. "That's when the penalties are called. It's definitely not an excuse, we did it to ourselves. We have to make it a focus, we can't be doing that."

EVAN MACY

Sixers comeback in Game 2 falls short as three-pointers don't fall

Philadelphia 76ers and Miami Heat battle for position during Game 2 of the first round of the 2018 NBA Playoffs. GETTY IMAGES

The Sixers nearly pulled off an incredible 16-point comeback Monday but ultimately fell to the Heat.

EVAN MACY
evan.macy@metro.us

For the first time in 17 games — and for just the second time at home this calendar year someone beat the Sixers.

Some might say it was just a matter of time. Others might say the Miami Heat studied hard, put together a gameplan and attacked the Sixers where they were weak. Whatever it was, Philadelphia faltered in Game 2 Monday night, 113-103, as Miami evened the seven-game series at 1-1.

The three-point shooting that propelled Philly to a Game 1 victory failed them in the second game, as the squad shot just 17.6 percent fro the field.

The Sixers made something out of nothing as things got close down the stretch. Trailing by 16 with less than a minute to go in the third quarter, an Ersan Ilyasova tip in cut an insurmountable lead to just two points at the four-minute mark. A 21-7 run was stopped when an ageless Dwyane Wade punished the Sixers with a breakaway dunk to highlight his 28-point outburst off the bench and build the lead back to eight points with two to play.

The unlikely victory just wasn't meant to be, though the grit and determination shown to fight back will certainly serve the team well when Joel Embiid returns — likely in Game 3 in Miami on Thursday.

Ben Simmons led Philly with another near triple double, netting 24 points, seven assists and eight rebounds. Dario Saric also had a big night scoring 23 points.

Miami had a scheme to slow down the Sixers and it was a doozy. After being pummelled from three (Philly shot better than 62 percent in Game 1) 130-103, they seemed very focused on slowing Philly down and messing up their pace of play. Officials whistled 30 fouls in the first half as Miami took advantage of the typically speedy Sixers and held them to 42 points, nearly 15 lower than their regular season average.

Trailing by 14, the comeback attempt began with a little 9-2 spirt to start the second half. The lead was built back to 12 but the temperature rose a bit on a highlight-reel play, with Dario Saric playing quarterback and throwing a three-quarter court pass to a streaking Ben Simmons, who punished the rim with a dunk.

By the time Dwyane Wade drilled a contested fadeaway jumper with Robert Covington's hand in his eye, Philly had found a way to lose ground and trailed 81-65 at the 2:28 mark in the third.

In the fourth, a Saric three cut the Miami lead to eight with just under nine minutes to play. The run would continue as Philadelphia made it competitive again seemingly from the brink of defeat.

As it was in Game 1, the Wells Fargo Center was a deafening convex well of sound, bubbling up at a fevered pitch as fans watched every possession with baited breath and intensity.

The first quarter showcased the incredible balance and shooting skill of Marco Belinelli and the continued pinpoint ball movement that has turned the Sixers offense from middling to groundbreaking during the regular season.

Aries Slow down and consider the consequence of your actions. It's important to look at all your options before you take on someone or something that's difficult.

Taurus You'll have a chance to make a unique contribution to something that you feel strongly about. Put your physical ability to the test and take bold steps.

Gemini Tidy up loose ends and go over financial documents. Pay close attention to contracts and settlements. Negotiate on your own behalf.

Cancer Get involved in projects or associations that you feel you can help. What you offer will be appreciated and will bring about an unusual offer that can improve your life.

Leo You'll be eager to make a change, but consider the cost involved and how loved ones will be affected before you jump into something.

Virgo Take a closer look at different ways to look after children or parents who need assistance. Calling a family meeting or talking to an expert will help.

Libra A purchase you want to make will have hidden costs. Find out what's expected of you before committing to participate in a joint venture. Don't make a change if it's too costly.

Scorpio Physical changes will give you the boost you need to initiate your plans. Partnerships will lead to greater opportunities and the chance to use your skills in a gratifying way.

Sagittarius Getting along with your peers will help you avoid a setback that could affect your income. You'll be tempted to make a spur-of-the-moment decision that can lead to loss.

Capricorn Concentrate on home, family and personal gains. Taking time to rejuvenate or doing something that will improve your relationship with a loved one should be a priority.

Aquarius Don't place too much importance on what others do. Be your own boss and follow the path that suits you best. If peer pressure is applied, opt to do your own thing.

Pisces The past will be a good barometer for how to best handle what's heading your way. An investment opportunity could lead to a higher standard of living. EUGENIA LAST

VICTORY-1

OSTEOARTHRITIS

KNEE PAIN CAN BE DEFEATING

BUT VICTORY CAN BE YOURS.

The VICTORY-1 study is a 52-week clinical trial examining an ultra-purified form of capsaicin - a naturally-occurring compound found in chili peppers - and its potential to provide extended relief from osteoarthritis knee pain with a single local injection. If you are between 40 and 95 years of age, have knee osteoarthritis with moderate to severe pain, and have experienced difficulty managing your knee osteoarthritis pain, you may be eligible to participate. Speak with a member of the staff to learn if the VICTORY-1 study may be an option for you.
